Culture and Folklore

Music is one of the most unique and identifying expressions of Paraguay. It appeared as creation of the Creole, in the mid-nineteenth century. The polka, which adopted the name of the European rhythm, is the most typical form and have their slightly different versions on La Galopa (the gallops), the kyre'ÿ and the Paraguayan Song. The Guaranía is the second most popular form of Paraguayan music, created by the great Paraguayan musician José Asunción Flores in 1925, and has a slower pace that admirably expresses the melancholy of Paraguayans.

The Paraguayan music is supported basically on two instruments: the guitar and the harp, whose first samples were brought by the conquerors and found its own national label and style in the country.

The Paraguayan dance had a similar story to the theater, making way over a strong Spanish heritage. The Polca dance, known today as the most typical rhythm of Paraguay, was born in the footsteps of European polka brought by the colonizers.

Asuncion

Green Capital of Iberoamerica 2015

Asuncion was unanimously declared Iberoamerican Green Capital 2015, by the Sixteenth Plenary Assembly of the Union of American Capital Cities (UCCI), which took place from September 25 to 26 in Buenos Aires - Argentina.

Among the reasons that supported this important award was the total area of green space of Asuncion: 23.396.490,62 m², that means 45,38 m² of public and private green area per inhabitant, in wich the green public area represents 26,03 m² per inhabitant.

Founded in 1537 on the banks of the Paraguay River, in the Bay, Asuncion is the Capital of Paraguay. The city has a little over 500,000 inhabitants, although peripheral cities make up the Greater Asunción over a million inhabitants.

Asuncion is a welcoming city, colored in spring with Lapacho and Jacaranda flowers , with some nostalgic and wide avenues. Asuncion is set on a hilly land identified by its "seven hills", that somehow impose the contrast between its different districts. Its height above sea level is no more than 120 meters and its area covers 117 km².

Gastronomy and Night Life

Paraguayan cuisine offers a number of delicious dishes and desserts. The typical food is prepared with fresh and natural products, as it is customary to eat what is harvested on day. Beef is an essential element of the Paraguayan cuisine. In Paraguay you will find excellent dishes prepared from maize and manioc. There is also a wide variety of fruits much of the year.

Consuming Paraguayensis Ilex or Yerba mate is one of the greatest traditions of Paraguay. With this herb is prepared the Tereré, a refreshing drink made with herbs and cold water, consumed by most Paraguayans.

As in the main capitals of the world, the nightlife in Asunción has an interesting variety of options : pubs, bars, discotheques, restaurants, lounges, cafes, cinemas, theaters and concerts. We can identify two areas in the city where the night scene is concentrated : The historic downtown area and the port area, known for its cafes, bars, pubs, karaoke and Choperías, and the Hard Rock Café Asunción. In the other side of the city, in the Villa Morra and Carmelitas zone, you will find the best clubs, lounges and restaurants.
